ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

In the first quarter of 2022, the S&P 500 Index and MSCI All Country World Islamic Index lost -4.60% and -2.92%, respectively. Markets started the year on a weak note and didn't recover their quarterly losses despite staging an impressive rally in the last two weeks of March. Rising inflation and interest rate hikes by the US Federal Reserve clouded the global growth outlook, especially in the Technology sector. As Russia's attacks on Ukraine intensified, investor sentiment further dampened.

Investor concerns centered on potential global disruptions to commodity supplies, particularly energy and wheat. The punitive sanctions imposed upon Russia by the US and its allies were also a cause of concern; the sanctions were meant to isolate Russia economically and financially from the rest of the world, and this led to disruptions of the energy and food supply chain. The sanctions, along with elevated inflation and tight monetary policy, will persist for some time. These developments are not positive for global growth, corporate profitability, or valuations.

Our outlook remains unchanged as we expect sentiment and share prices to remain volatile. On one hand, valuations would be supported by continued global economic recovery as the world moves toward accepting COVID-19 as endemic. On the other hand, central banks would have to walk a tightrope in their efforts to prevent runaway inflation without stymieing growth – all this against the backdrop of a geopolitically fractured world and potentially lengthy supply chain disruptions, none of which are conducive for growth. In this type of environment, companies which succeed will be those best able to navigate higher inflation and interest rates. Stock selection will become even more important for the success of any equity portfolio.
